Haas, Klizan, Matosevic among winners for 2012 season

LONDON – Novak Djokovic, Roger Federer and the No. 1 duo of Bob and Mike Bryan each take home a pair of honours in the 2012 ATP World Tour Awards presented by Moët & Chandon.

Djokovic, who receives the ATP World Tour No. 1 award for a second straight year, has also been selected as the Arthur Ashe Humanitarian of the Year for his contributions through the Novak Djokovic Foundation, his role as a UNICEF ambassador and other charitable ventures.

Defending Barclays ATP World Tour Finals champion Federer continues his domination in two categories respectively selected by his peers and fans, taking his total to 24 ATP World Tour Awards since 2003. The 31-year-old Swiss collects the Stefan Edberg Sportsmanship Award for the eighth time, and extends his reign as the ATPWorldTour.com Fans' Favourite presented by RICOH to a record 10th straight year.

The Bryans have also been named repeat recipients of two doubles awards: ATP World Tour No. 1 Doubles Team and ATPWorldTour.com Fans' Favourite. The 34-year-old twins have now won each award a record eight times.

The trio will be presented with their trophies in on-court ceremonies this week at The O2. The Ron Bookman Media Award and ATP Tournament of the Year Awards will be announced at a later date.

ATP World Tour No. 1 (determined by South African Airways ATP Rankings)
Novak Djokovic: The 25-year-old Serbian is the first player to clinch the year-end No. 1 South African Airways ATP Ranking in consecutive seasons since Roger Federer achieved four straight World No. 1 finishes from 2004-07. Djokovic successfully defended the Australian Open title and reached the final at six ATP World Tour Masters 1000 tournaments, winning titles in Miami, Toronto and Shanghai. He also lifted the Beijing trophy and was a finalist at Roland Garros and the US Open. He comes to the Barclays ATP World Tour Finals with a 70-11 match record, the third time in four years he's reached at least 70 wins.

Bob Bryan and Mike Bryan: The Americans finish as the No. 1 duo in the ATP Doubles Team Rankings for a fourth successive year and record eighth time overall (2003, '05-07, '09-12). They captured seven titles – their 11th straight season of winning five or more – highlighted by a record-equalling 12th Grand Slam trophy at the US Open and the gold medal at the London 2012 Olympic Games. won a pair of ATP World Tour Masters 1000 tournaments in Monte-Carlo and Toronto, and were runners-up at the Australian Open and Roland Garros. They have won the most doubles team titles in the Open Era with 82, and Mike Bryan broke Todd Woodbridge's individual record when he won his 84th trophy with the twins' victory in Beijing.

Stefan Edberg Sportsmanship Award (voted by ATP players)
Roger Federer: Fellow players voted the Swiss as the winner of the Stefan Edberg Sportsmanship Award for the eighth time and second year in a row. He had won the award six straight years from 2004-09 before Rafael Nadal broke the streak in 2011. Marin Cilic, Juan Martin del Potro and David Ferrer were also nominated in this category.

Most Improved Player of the Year (voted by ATP players)
Marinko Matosevic: At the age of 27, Marinko Matosevic enjoyed a career-best season that saw him finish 2012 as the No. 1 Australian with a career-high position of World No. 47. The right-hander from Melbourne reached his first ATP World Tour final in Delray Beach where, as a qualifier ranked World No. 173, he beat four Top 80 players before finishing runner-up to Kevin Anderson. He also reached the semi-finals in Los Angeles and compiled a 17-19 match record on the year.

Newcomer of the Year, presented by Moët & Chandon (voted by ATP players)
Martin Klizan: The 23 year old has jumped 88 places in the South African Airways ATP Rankings since the start of the season to hit a career-high World No. 29. The left-hander compiled a 19-15 mark, highlighted by winning his first ATP World Tour title in St. Petersburg with victory over Fabio Fognini. A few weeks earlier, the Bratislava native had knocked out Jo-Wilfried Tsonga en route to a fourth-round showing at the US Open.

Comeback Player of the Year (voted by ATP players)
Tommy Haas: The 34-year-old German rolled back the years as he re-established himself in the Top 25 in the South African Airways ATP Rankings, having started the season outside the Top 200. Haas had been sidelined for 14 months between February 2010 and May 2011 following hip surgery, but found top form once again in 2012. The former World No. 2 defeated Roger Federer to win the Halle title, finished runner-up in Hamburg and Washington and recorded his 500th match win with victory in the Vienna second round in October.

Arthur Ashe Humanitarian of the Year (awarded by ATP)
Novak Djokovic: The Serb joined Rafael Nadal, Roger Federer, Carlos Moya, former South African president Nelson Mandela and Arthur Ashe as winners of the Arthur Ashe Humanitarian Award, recognised for his contributions through the Novak Djokovic Foundation, his role as a UNICEF ambassador and other individual ventures. His Foundation raised $1.4 million for early childhood education through its inaugural fundraising dinner in New York in September and a week later he visited the "Beneath the Linden Trees" kindergarten, a UNICEF initiative in Lesnica, Serbia, to raise awareness of the importance of early childhood education. In October, Djokovic collaborated with UNIQLO to develop and launch 'Clothes for Smiles,' a new program that aims to give children of all ages a chance for a better future. The program has established a $10 million fund that helps nurture the dreams of children worldwide.

ATPWorldTour.com Fans' Favourite, presented by RICOH (Singles) (voted by fans)
